A STORY OF KANSAS BONDS.

How A. L. Williams Dealt With an Attempted Fraud When He Was Attorney General.

Topeka, Kas., Nov. 14.—(Special.) In introducing General A. L. Williams, chief attorney for the Union Pacific railway, for Kansas, as editor-in-chief for one week only, the Topeka Mail and Breeze relates the following anecdote of him, the date of which being at the time Mr. Williams was attorney general of Kansas.

"An owner of a large amount of county bonds, who had been deceived by a manipulator in control of affairs, presented the lot to him, and gave Mr. Williams to understand very significantly that if he would give an opinion that they were in due form and in every respect legal he would be more than well paid for the service. When the man came back for them, Mr. Williams handed the whole bunch to him, and on opening them the manipulator discovered on the face of each bond, along and across such blue, green, red and gold embossment that tried to suppress the fraud, these words were written:

"These bonds are not worth a cent."

"Attorney General A. L. Williams," said the manipulator, "and if any other public official hereafter denounces a manipulator in the protection of the sacred school fund or other public duty to us to force out the money, I will give him $10,000."

"I will pay for the service," said the manipulator, "but I will not pay for the fraud."

"These bonds are not worth a cent," said the manipulator, "and if any other public official hereafter denounces a manipulator in the protection of the sacred school fund or other public duty to us to force out the money, I will give him $10,000."

"I will pay for the service," said the manipulator, "but I will not pay for the fraud."
